TUESDAY, MAY 25, 1915.

Sir Redmond Robin says he would not join the Border guards "on a bet." One smash in a year is enough for him.

Why not a plebiscite on the market question, and also on the street numbering question, when the vote on the gas agreement is taken?

Letters from the front show that the 19th Dragoons have been in the fighting around Ypres. That they did their part with the rest may be taken for granted.

The contractors refuse to give evidence before the Manitoba commission. That will pretty well clinch the conclusion the public drew from the hurried exit of Premier Roblin.

If the supervisors do not succeed in "enthusing" the teachers any more than the efforts of the school board toward economy have enthused the taxpayers, the supervisors had better be fired now.

The annual census of the city is being taken. In some former years the chief interest in the census was to see how many people have flocked into the city during the twelve-month. This year the chief interest will be to note how many are left.

There are times when a shrinkage of population is a healthy sign of a city. But the population of Edmonton, like all other western cities, had got out of proportion to the density of settlement in the country is unquestionable. The larger the shrinkage, however, the stronger the evidence and this disportion is being rectified, and that the process of readjustment is getting toward completion. When it is completed we will have a fresh start with more permanently favorable conditions.

The man who sells a defective horse to the government these days becomes a sharer in the robbery of the public, and also in the cost of the war. He is at fault at a critical moment in the field. Alberta people have given their sons to the army without hesitation. They have a personal as well as a patriotic motive in sending their young men because no one offers any sound horses for artillery work. It may some day depend upon these horses to bring up the guns in time to save a detachment of Alberta men from annihilation.

It is probable that the German drive against the Russian centre succeeded so unfortunately because the Russians were lacking in numbers. Russia is a vast farming country, with a tremendous population, but without munition factories at all in proportion to the men that can be put in the field. During the winter disputes as to whether or not there was a want of munitions and other manufactured supplies which Russia could not produce and which the allies could not get in. The opening of the Dardanelles is needed as much to allow war material to get in as to allow wheat to get out.

The W. A. P. correspondent says construction or some form of compensation is being made for able-bodied men in some form in war service is among the principal measures in Great Britain. It may not be possible, or necessary, to organize the industry and business of Canada in a similar manner, but the industry and business of Great Britain under direction of the government for the prosecution of the war. But it is possible to raise two or three thousand soldiers in Canada that have been raised. And every man Canada sends to the front will leave a man in England to make shells and other needed munitions.

Even his newspaper friends are beginning to warn Sir Redmond that Canada is not doing its share.

After a Zeppelin raid on London just now would not be an unmixed disaster if the raiders "got" Lord Northcliffe and the battery of newspapers with which he is trying to "get" Lord Kitchener.

The same day a Washington dispatch announced that the war on merchant ships had been called off until Berlin had answered the United States' note a German submarine sank a British passenger-carrying vessel in the channel. Washington does not know Berlin very well yet.

The fleet at the Dardanelles tackled the Turk and found him a Tartar. To do him justice the fleet is not going to fight that would do no discredit to my nation, thanks to the direction of German officers and the inspiration of knowing that he is fighting with a halter about his neck.

The submarine war upon fishing vessels continues. That is merely a wanton waste of human life and of ammunition, without any military purpose save the trifling one of keeping ships from getting fish supplies. Even if the end could be attained, it would not be worth the cost—to say nothing of the moral responsibility.

Undoubtedly the ratepayers of the city have had their fill of street railway extensions for a while. But the petition from the residents of Calder is deserving of consideration. By taking over and working the interurban company, at comparatively small expense, this community could be brought into touch with the business centre of the city. The resultant benefits should be considered an offset to the added burden imposed on the street railway.

A great many people think it somewhat unfair that racing meets and other sporting events should be held while the Empire is struggling for its life. That would undoubtedly be the case if any one of us dared to neglect our duty in respect of them. But Canada is not threatened with any wave of unseemly levity just because people are thinking more seriously than they ever did before, and are making use of every opportunity given them of doing a bit to help. Perhaps it is as well that a race meet or other event should be held once in a while, just as a release from the strain of war to see the races during the next few days will not thereby in any way interfere with the carrying on of the war in any detail. Nor would it be fair to the uninterested people in any way help the cause. And whether or not all agree as to the wisdom of holding the meet, the event is being held. The question now is whether it will be a success or failure. If it is successful the fact probably helps to restore and establish confidence in Edmonton abroad and among ourselves. It is not successful the influence will be to the contrary.

And the success or failure of anything in the nature of an enterprise depending upon public patronage just now has a far wider influence than under normal conditions. The Hudson's Bay Company holds a house in this year of scarce money and public debt, and made a success of it, gained for the city a very large amount of helpful publicity. If on top of that we had a really successful race meet the announcement will tend to confirm public faith in Edmonton as a city whose people are neither bankrupt nor depressed in spirit.

The man who sells a defective horse to the government these days becomes a sharer in the robbery of the public, and also in the cost of the war. He is at fault at a critical moment in the field.
